B. Major Field

Research is focused in the area of nutrient control of gene expression. Major efforts are being devoted to the elucidation of the mechanisms responsible for the altered gene expression modulated by nutrients and bioactives. In 2006, a program was initiated to examine the influence of food and medicinal plant materials with bioactivities on cell cycle progression and on expression of tumor suppressor genes in normal human prostate epithelial cells and prostate tumor cell lines. In 2008, Lei as director of equipment acquisition initiated the establishment of a new Molecular Cancer Biology Research Lab (MCBRL) at King Saud University (KSU). A research project, in collaboration with the Children's National Clinical Research Center, was initiated in 2011 to attenuate college weight gain through an Internet-delivered behavioral support system that includes weekly email messages and online resources to select health goals and track progress.
